The ONLINEFILM project: examples of different websites and applications
The Onlinefilm Project with the [ cb-film/shopadmin ] database

We have put together for you here a selection of websites that use the CultureBase technology, developed in collaboration with ONLINEFILM AG for maintaining and releasing films and film information. ONLINEFILM uses Kulturserver’s technology which, together with the CultureBase database and the accompanying software modules, forms an extensive user suite for collecting and managing data in the cultural sector. We would like to explain to you all of many the things you can do with our distribution software/platform and the films made available by the filmmakers for specific purposes.

We will show you the multitude of applications that can be used to get the films onto various portals. They all share the same basic technology that allow for targeted release among the various distribution channels, with minimal effort. Open presentation platforms can be recorded in the same way as projects with precisely defined editorial content or an exclusive scope – targeted only at the B2B sector, if necessary. Finally, this strategy serves not only to improve visibility of the film but also increases its google ranking!

The potential data depth of each film entry in [cb-shopadmin] and [cb-film] allows a high quality of metadata describing the film. This, together with up-to-date software for fast distribution of films as “download to own” and as “stream to rent”, provides an independent, flexible and self-determined presentation platform for filmmakers.
onlinefilm.org

www.onlinefilm.org

Together with its partners, ONLINEFILM AG has produced www.onlinefilm.org, a legal online distribution platform for German and international films. Films are distributed and marketed online throughout entire world via the website.

In addition to the German onlinefilm.org website, numerous individual country portals have been launched in the meantime. Currently they offer mainly documentaries for purchase as download or stream.

The European Film Award is a pan-European prize given by the European Film Academy and is often referred to as the “European Oscar”. The website hosting this year’s trailers, interviews and previews runs exclusively on CultureBase technology.

Every year in February, it presents documentary film productions from the previous year at the Berlin International Film Festival. In addition to the films, there is also information on the various production companies including contact addresses. An editorial section provides news on congresses, markets and festivals that are of particular interest to German documentary film makers.
KAOS Art and Video Archive
www.kaos-archiv.de

The KAOS Art and Video Archive was created in order to store artists’ videos from the KAOS gallery and KAOS team productions, and to provide access to the public within different contexts, as well as to private individuals and educational institutes. The site uses CultureBase technology for the distribution of its own films via its own website.
Italy onlinefilm.org

www.italy.onlinefilm.org

The scalable solution of CultureBase technology has been used to launch seven different country portals, as in this example of Italian films and film makers. The website can be viewed in both the country’s language as well as in English, so that international visitors can also use the portal. The respective country partner of onlinefilm.org defines the selection of films and the written content.
